

Job Prospects in Epping

JOB PROSPECTS, a division of Service to Youth Council (SYC), has opened an office in Epping to provide locals with support to look for employment and training, at no cost.

A leading provider of recruitment, training and employment services, Job Prospects will also help employers searching for employees.

CEO Paul Edginton said that Job Prospects would provide much-needed support to the community, both for employers and job seekers.

“Job Prospects is about helping local people find work with a local employer, which is a ‘win - win’ situation for Epping.

“We are not only a cost-effective recruiter for employers, but also provide valuable advice to job seekers ensuring they are job-ready before entering the workforce,” he said.

“We look forward to connecting local job seekers with local employers”.

Eleven Job Prospects offices have opened across Melbourne in recent times.

Mr Edginton said that they see a real opportunity to support residents in finding work with reliable employers.

“We also recognise that many businesses are currently experiencing tough financial conditions,” he added.

“The provision of our services at no charge assists these businesses by providing a reduction in the costs associated with recruiting new staff.

“Catering for all industries and occupations, we are confident our presence in these areas will improve unemployment rates.”

Job Prospects Epping is located at 11 Buch Avenue and can be contacted on 8401 4801.
